A Snake Her Birthmark.

Little Seraphina Sciaolina lies in one of those tiny cots in the children's ward at Bellevue, with that horrid snake around her neck still. She is laughing and bright-eyed, and doesn't seem to mind it at all. She wonders what every-body is looking at her so for, and when strangers go in and shudder as they see the hideous thing, she coos and chuckles merrily.

That snake is something that has been puzzling the doctors for ten days. The little two-year-old was taken to the hospital from her home, at 43 Oak street, with a broken leg. The mother and father had thought it nothing strange that a snake should be coiled around the little one's neck in that threatening way. It looks brown and scaly, and is raised about a tenth of an inch from the surface of the skin. Doctor Getty has tried to see if it couldn't be taken off, but none of the Bellevue doctors thinks that the experiment could be made with success. The head of the snake is like that of a rattlesnake, and rests just be-low the collar bone. The coils go around the neck twice. The tail is under the lobe of the right ear. The thing

The mother is thirty-one years old, and came from Paladino, Italy, Sera-phina is the second of three children. The mother was maried four years ago. She says that when she was a girl her father was a boatman, and she used to help him unload fruit from his boat. One day a great snake darted from some fruit and coiled itself around her arm. She went into hysterics. Ever after that frightful visions of the snake have haunted her. They appeared to her nearly every night before Scraphina was born. At the birth she had an awful vision, and she thought that the snake had coiled itself around her nounced in the newspapers that Decoration Day would be celebrated at Appointion by the erection of iron signboards to mark the location of the two armies at the hour of the surren-der, but Major Davis, of the army, who has charge of such affairs, tells me, writes the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Record, that he had heard of no arrangement of the kind. The signboards were placed nearly a year ago. The old town of Appomattox, he says, is entirely deserted, with the exception of five or six families, of whom only one, that of a Methodist clergyman, is white. A syndicate bought up all the property a few years ago, as a speculation, and when the owners got their money and signed their deeds they moved away, leaving their houses empty.
